Stay at home at all time except to:

- Buy Food and essentials
- Take Daily exercise
- Care for vulnerable person
- Work, if can't work from home

All vulnerable people must shield for 12 weeks

“The queue is seen as an organic formation, a series of semi-improvised, tacit understandings between ordinary people. Its self-regulating aspect allows it to be recuperated for a certain strain of English liberalism which values consensual, micro-adjustments in everyday life as a guarantor of social solidarity”

Joe Moran, 2005

The markings should:

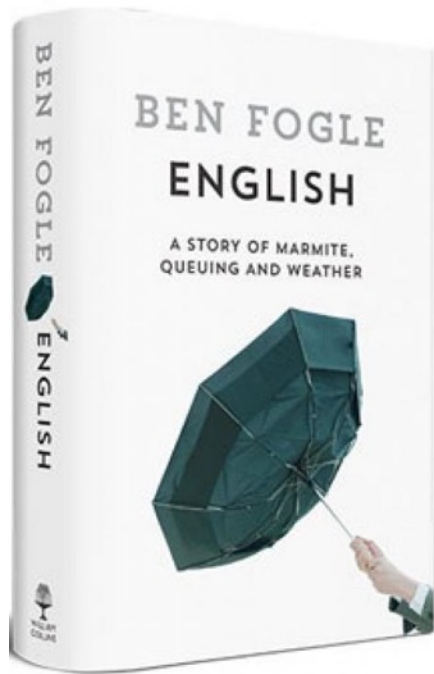

- focus queues along the building frontage as long as this is safe
- be parallel to the frontage
- be on one side of the footway to allow people to pass in a safe way
- Queues should not extend beyond the frontage of individual shops.
- Use temporary degradable paint and renew it when necessary
- Permanent paint is not permitted.

Hampshire County Council (2020)

The unwritten rules of queuing:

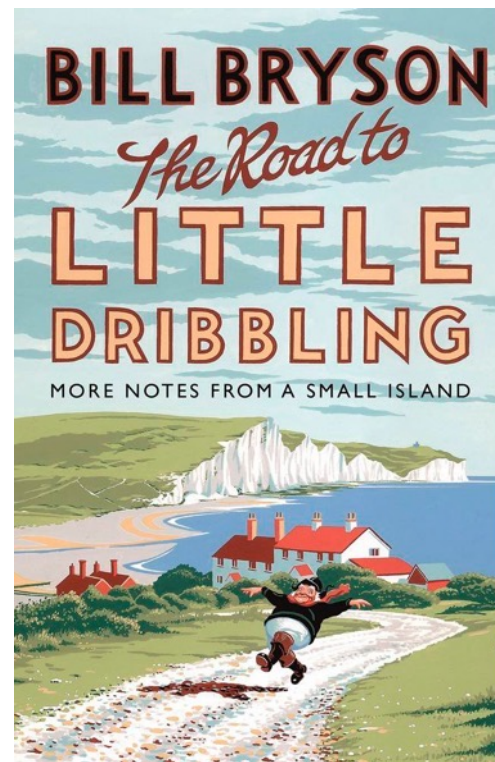

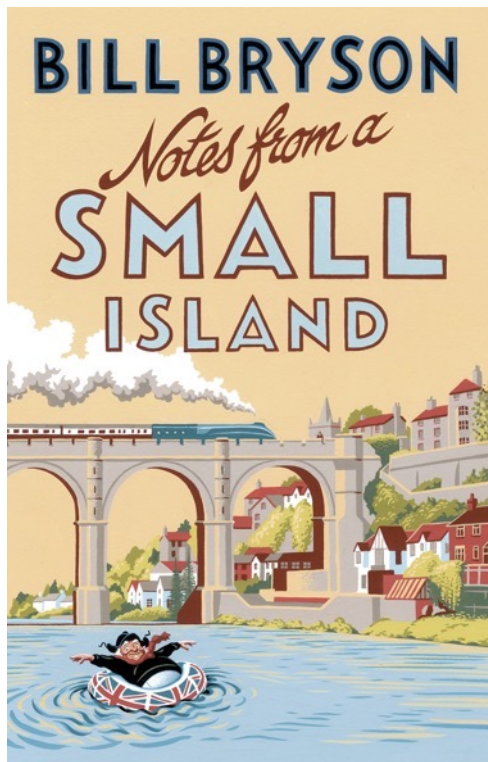

- you may not push in
- you may leave the queue momentarily and return to your original place
- a close family member may join you
- in long, immobile queues, you can leave a place-holder & come back later.

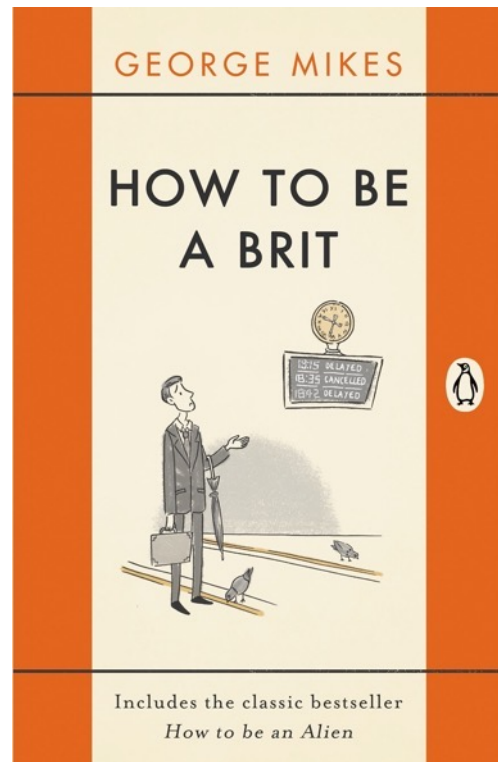

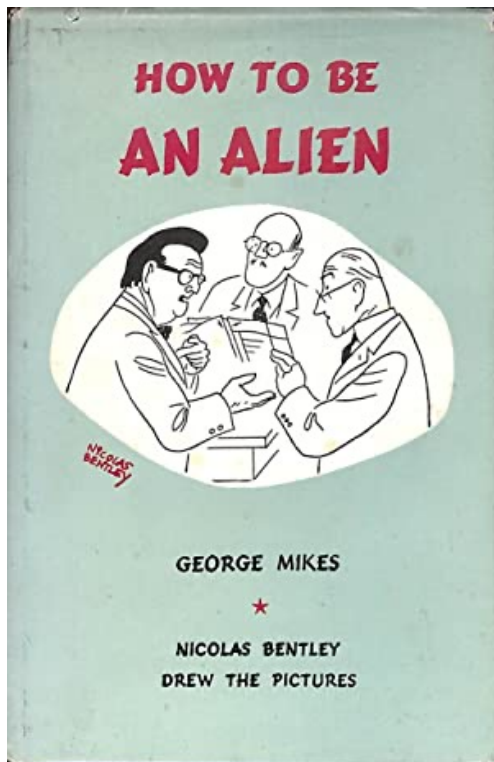

John Morrish, Management Today (2013)

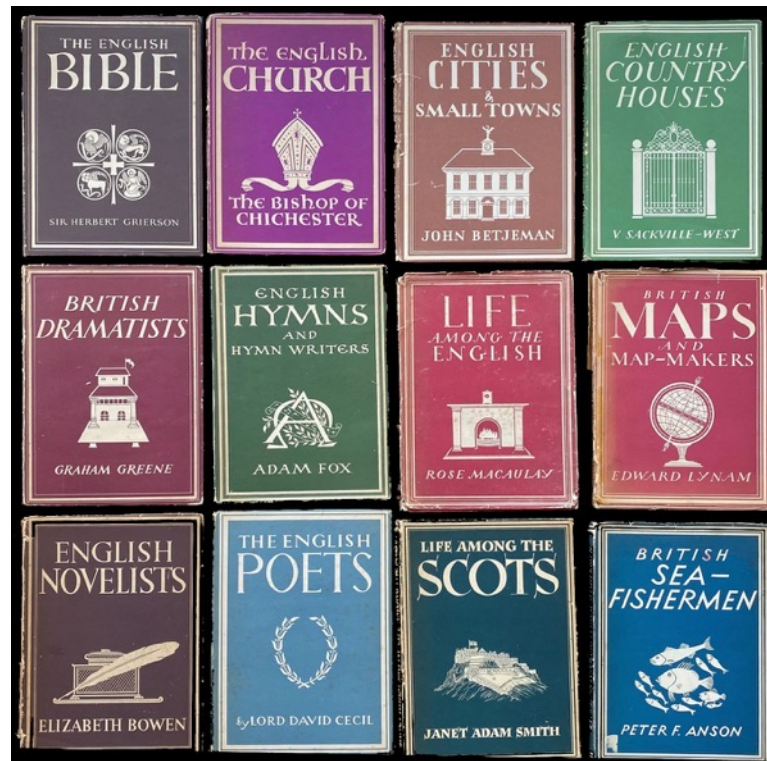

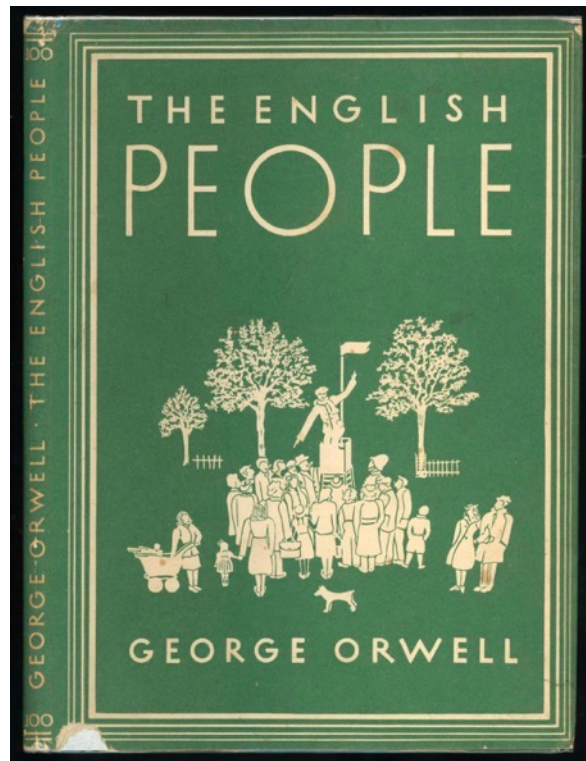

“We respect the queue but we also love to hate it...”

“Some would say that the British are good at organising themselves into a queue but not so good at waiting in it”

Coronavirus panic-buying makes March busiest month on record – even beating Christmas

The average household has increased its spending by £62.92 over the last four weeks, with shoppers in London, where the coronavirus hit first, spent a quarter more than they usually do

March was the busiest month on record for supermarkets across Britain as shoppers stocked up on vital supplies to prepare for the coronavirus pandemic.

Grocery sales rose by a staggering 20.6% in the last four weeks, and 7.6% in the last 12, according to new data from Kantar, beating even the Christmas shopping surge.

It comes as the boss of online grocer Ocado warned shoppers are currently buying £1billion more food a week than usual – with suppliers doubling their production to replicate the weeks before Christmas.

Coronavirus: Supermarket shoppers 'keep calm' and queue

Coronavirus pandemic

Shoppers at Heaton Park in Manchester showing how it's done

The supermarket shop suddenly looks a little different. So how are people managing under the new restrictions?

Britons are known around the world for our queuing skills, and it would seem we still love to line up even when maintaining social distance.

The banner features three diagonal blue ribbons on the left side. Each ribbon contains three circular icons and a text label: 'HANDS' (handwashing icon), 'FACE' (face mask icon), and 'SPACE' (social distancing icon). The background is a teal gradient. On the right, the text 'ACT NOW!' is displayed in large white letters. Below it is a diagram of four stylized human figures (two female, two male) standing in a row, connected by double-headed arrows to represent social distancing. At the bottom right, the text 'WE CAN HELP ENFORCE SOCIAL DISTANCING' is written in white.

Separation Screens

Tensator's panel system can be used to create a physical separation barrier, whether this is between service positions, walkways or within a queue. They can be freestanding or retrofitted into a queue environment. Different widths and floor fixings are available.
