

The object of horror: gaze and voice in Candyman
[abstract only]

BLACK, Jack <<http://orcid.org/0000-0002-1595-5083>>

Available from Sheffield Hallam University Research Archive (SHURA) at:

<https://shura.shu.ac.uk/30853/>

This document is the Accepted Version [AM]

Citation:

BLACK, Jack (2022). The object of horror: gaze and voice in Candyman [abstract only]. In: Candyman and the Whole Damn Swarm – A 30th Anniversary Conference, Sheffield, 7-9 Oct 2022. (Unpublished) [Conference or Workshop Item]

Copyright and re-use policy

See <http://shura.shu.ac.uk/information.html>

The Object of Horror: Gaze and Voice in Candyman

Jack Black, PhD, Sheffield Hallam University

Presented at:

‘Candyman and the Whole Damn Swarm – A 30th Anniversary Conference’, Sheffield Hallam University, UK, October 2022.

Conference website:

<http://www.sheffieldhistoryofthegothic.group.shef.ac.uk/index.php/candyman/>

Citation:

Black, Jack. “The Object of Horror: Gaze and Voice in Candyman.” Paper presented at the Candyman and the Whole Damn Swarm – A 30th Anniversary Conference, Sheffield Hallam University, Sheffield, UK, October 7—9, 2022.

For a copy of the paper, contact j.black@shu.ac.uk

Abstract

Drawing from psychoanalytic theory, this paper will explore how the importance of the gaze in film studies occupies both an auditorial and visual significance for the horror genre. This significance can be identified in the genre’s unique relation to the cinematic object—the impossible Lacanian objet petit a—which is apparent in its employment of the gaze and voice. While working to dissolve the apparent separation of the spectator from the cinematic image—thus, laying bare our subjective desire and unconscious involvement—depictions of the gaze and voice offer a disturbing presence within film. This is apparent in ‘horror classics’, such as Hitchcock’s Psycho (1960) and The Birds (1963), as well as a number of recently released franchise sequels. Indeed, while this paper will draw from various horror examples (past and present), specific attention will be given to examining the effects of the gaze and voice in Bernard Rose (1992) and Nia DaCosta’s (2021) Candyman films.

In Rose’s Candyman (1992), examples of the voice occupy a key role in building the Candyman’s absent presence on-screen; yet it is only through comparing Rose’s original with DaCosta's (2021) cinematic revival that examples of the voice are noticeably absent within DaCosta's film. Although uncanny encounters with mirrored reflections pave the way for the Candyman's deadly resurrection, DaCosta's take on the horror classic relies entirely upon its adoption of the gaze. This allows us to question: What impact does this move from voice to gaze present for Candyman and its 'legacy sequel'; and what does this change reveal about recent horror revivals, remakes, and sequels? By affording further reflection on the contemporary horror genre, the relation between gaze and voice will offer important conclusions regarding the Candyman legacy as well as the theoretical changes that this legacy brings to the genre.

References

- Hoeveler, Diane Long. "The Postfeminist Filmic Female Gothic Detective: Reading the Bodily Text in Candyman." In Postfeminist Gothic: Critical Interventions in Contemporary Culture, edited by Benjamin A. Brabon and Stephanie Genz, 99—113. London, UK: Palgrave Macmillan, 2007.
- Kee, Jessica Baker. "Black Masculinities and Postmodern Horror: Race, Gender, and Abjection." Visual Culture & Gender 10: 47—56.
- Lacan, Jacques. The Four Fundamental Concepts of Psycho-Analysis. London, UK: Routledge, 2018.
- McGowan, Todd. The Real Gaze: Film Theory After Lacan. New York, NY: SUNY Press, 2007.
- McGowan, Todd. "The Object of Silent Cinema." Crisis & Critique 7, no. 2: 229—243, 2020.
- Zizek, Slavoj. "'I Hear You with My Eyes'; or, The Invisible Master." In Gaze and Voice as Love Objects, SIC 1, edited by Renata Salecl and Slavoj Zizek, 90—128. Durham, NC: Duke University Press, 1996.
- Zizek, Slavoj. Everything You Always Wanted to Know About Lacan. London, UK: Verso, 2010.

Jack Black is a Senior Lecturer at Sheffield Hallam University and affiliated with the Centre for Culture, Media and Society, where he is Research Lead for the 'Anti-Racism Research Group'. An interdisciplinary researcher, working within psychoanalysis, media, and cultural studies, Jack is the author of Race, Racism and Political Correctness in Comedy – A Psychoanalytic Exploration (Routledge, 2021). His current research focuses on race, racism, and psychosis as well as online hate during international sporting events ('Tackling Online Hate in Football').